Report from the President

On the idea from the Norwegian Demographic Society the four Nordic Demographic Societies made a joint statement in June last year, supporting NIDI, with an urge to the Dutch government to reconsider their proposal to reduce and discontinue the basic funding of NIDI. We were glad to learn that The Royal Netherlands Academy of Arts and Sciences (KNAW) and the University of Groningen as a consequence of the decision decided to fund the institute.

The board have again discussed the future of the Nordic Symposium, as this year's symposium was at risk of being cancelled due to lack of participants up until the very last minute. It is still the opinion of the board that the symposium is important for the Nordic researchers within the field.

It seems that funding issues is now a problem in many research institutes and departments in our countries and that limiting the participation in conferences is a consequence.

The board hopes that members in the national demographic associations also in the future will prioritize their participation in the symposium.

The Finnish Demographic Society has made a suggestion to postpone the next Nordic Demographic Symposium one year in order for the symposium to be out of sync with the European Population Conference in the future. The National boards have discussed the matter internally and all have supported the idea. Future symposiums are thus scheduled to take place in odd years.

The board have discussed the change in the mode of transferring funds from the Nordic Society to the National society organising the symposium we decided two years ago and finds it a fruitful change based on this years' experience. It is up to the organising society to decide how to spend the money.

The Danish Demographic Society was granted a contribution to spend on student travel grants and a general lowering of participation fee. After not having received any applications for grants and facing the risk of cancellation, the Danish Society was given the permission to spend the Nordic contribution on other costs related to the symposium. In the future the Swedish board, managing the finances distributes the standings each year instead of only in connection with the board meetings. The members of the board agree that any surplus after the symposiums must be returned to the Nordic Association as seen after the 2010 symposium in Lund and again after the 2012 symposium in Tønsberg.

Emma Lundholm as head of the Swedish board, who manage the books of the Nordic Association, presents the economy. She notes that all members have paid membership fees for 2013 and 2014.

The Next Symposium

The Finnish Demographic Society has agreed that they will take on the task of organising the next symposium in Finland and as mentioned in the Presidents report, it will take place in 2017.

Hanna Remes, head of the Finnish Demographic Society, welcomes us all to the next symposium and ask if anyone has any requests for the upcoming symposium. There was general support for May or June 2017 and it was requested that the dates would be chosen early and would not collide with other arrangements. It was also requested, that the symposium would take place in one of the bigger cities in Finland.
